

REMOTE WORKING BUSINESS PHONE MUST-HAVES

1. Mobile applications

Remote working employees don't necessarily stay in one place. They can complete their tasks from anywhere. Mobile Apps allow for greater flexibility. Remote workers can take their office extension with them wherever they go.

They also mean employees can stay in contact with the office at all times without a reduction in productivity.

2. WebRTC video conferencing

Video conferencing, the remote working alternative to meetings. Organising virtual get togethers is super easy, with extra features such as screen sharing and whiteboard capabilities that can make these digital gatherings more interactive and engaging.

Employees can dial in directly from mobile when they are on the go so they don't miss out on important company discussions.

3. Instant Messaging

Up to 90% of people prefer to send a text or voice message rather than make a call. Remote employees need to be able communicate and talk to their co-workers throughout the working day and this is why instant messaging is crucial.

It allows a team to easily communicate and collaborate without the need for lengthy phone or video chats.

4. Analytics and Reports

Working efficiently from home requires a lot of sustained self-discipline. And for many remote workers, achieving this goal is challenging. There are simply too many distractions at home. So accountability is incredibly important when companies shift to remote employment.

Reporting and analytics is can be a great way to get accountability, motivate team members and give peace of mind for business owners and managers.
